

Jason Penney's EHS Award

L-R – Craig Arthur, Stephen Beaton, Jerry Aguinaga from the Environmental Health and Safety Office, Jason Penney, Recipient of 2022 EHS Legacy Award, Peter Coutts and Darrell Boutilier from Facilities Management.

Award Citation:

Jason Penney has always had a tremendous focus on health and safety and has been the co-chair the Agricultural Campus Environmental Health and Safety Committee since its creation in 2016.

Jason has been actively involved in many safety initiatives over the past several years including staff training, building construction and renovation projects, building maintenance and infrastructure, and fire safety. Over the past year, Jason has gone over-and above his usual high level of effort and performance regarding health and safety. The list is impressive, but there are a few that particularly stick-out. He has actively participated in a number of incident investigations which led to positive changes at the University. He spearheaded the Greenhouse glass repairs at the Cox Institute. His work during the COVID-19 pandemic was, and continues to be, outstanding considering the administrative and logistical challenges.
