Working Together to Get Things Done

Painters Paul Hadley and Niall Carr were singled out as amazing people on the FM team.

"I was teaching in the Rowe building with students in our MBA-Career Advance group. They are mid career professionals. It was their final course. The atrium in the Rowe was scheduled to have some painting done. I did not know it was set up. One afternoon while I was lecturing after lunch you could hear the beep, beep, beep of a machine moving. I ignored it but it continued. So I came out of classroom and there were two painters working right outside. They immediately stopped and asked if I was teaching in 1011. I said I was and they asked a bunch of questions about when I was teaching. They immediately said they would work around any issues. I said thank you so much and their response was, "We work together to get things done."

I went back into the classroom so impressed with them. I told my class that those men exemplified what it means to not only understand an organization's mission but to live it. Everyday I came into teach, the painters were there and they always said as I was going into the classroom. "Go get 'em." Please thank them for me.

Carolan McLarney Professor; Chair, Strategy, Entrepreneurship, & International Business, Faculty of Management