2 Based on data submitted by participating universities. Includes traditional degree programmes, exchange, study abroad, dual degree, and other international education experiences.

Key Priority: International Learning Experiences

Many countries, including some of Canada's closest partners and competitors, have developed ambitious student mobility strategies because they understand that international learning provides important advantages to their students and their societies. These strategies have had striking results, sharply increasing the number of their students going abroad as part of their education. Meanwhile, Canada has been stuck in neutral (Global Education for Canadians, 2017, <http://goglobalcanada.ca/>).

In recent years, less than 3% of Canadian full-time undergraduates had an international experience in their university studies. Cost and inflexible curricular or transfer policies are the two most significant barriers to greater student mobility (Report on Internationalization at Canadian Universities, Universities Canada, 2014).
