

Faculty of Medicine Awards for Excellence in Medical Research
Supported by
Dalhousie Medical Research Foundation

INTRODUCTION

The Faculty of Medicine Awards for Excellence in Medical Research are made in tribute to Dr. J. Donald Hatcher whose vision as Dean of Medicine (1976-1985) led to the establishment of Dalhousie Medical Research Foundation. The following three awards have been created to acknowledge research excellence among our faculty members and to encourage their continued efforts in medical research:

The Faculty of Medicine Award for Excellence in Basic Research
The Faculty of Medicine Award for Excellence in Patient-Oriented Research
The Faculty of Medicine Early Career Investigator Award

ELIGIBILITY

Nominations for Faculty of Medicine Awards for Excellence in Medical Research will be considered for members of the Faculty of Medicine at Dalhousie University who, as of March 31st of the current academic year, have served no more than ten years since initial appointment at the level of assistant professor. SELECTION

The Faculty of Medicine Research Advisory Committee will be charged with the responsibility of selecting one recipient in each of the three Faculty of Medicine award categories. The Committee reserves the right to move nominees between categories, when a nominee meets criteria for multiple categories and there are no nominees who meet the criteria. Awards may not be made in any given year, should the Advisory Committee feel there are no candidates who meet the spirit and/or eligibility of the award. Applicants may only receive a Faculty of Medicine Award for Excellence in Medical Research once.
