In addition, it acknowledges that there can be physical and/or psychological stressors associated with the demands of residency training (long, irregular work hours, challenging clinical encounters, exams, financial stresses etc.).
- This policy reflects the program's commitment towards a safe, inclusive and healthy learning environment, for both faculty and trainees, by supporting a culture of wellness in all clinical and academic settings.

Resident Responsibilities

- Self assess for any illness or disability (physical, mental or emotional) that may impact their ability to safely and effectively carry out their clinical and academic duties.
- Seek out appropriate help or support early when health or wellness concerns arise and commit to appropriate follow up.
- When recognizing illness or disability (physical, mental or emotional) in another trainee, encourage them to seek out assistance through their local site resources, program or Resident Affairs.
- When learning environment concerns arise seek out support for discussion and possible reporting of same (ie with resident affairs, program, trusted mentor)

Faculty Responsibilities

- Report fit for duty and ensure they are able to perform clinical duties in a safe and effective manner.
- Create and model safe and healthy work and learning environment for all trainees. Be aware of processes to intervene and mitigate learning environment concerns as they may arise.
