*This reflects the average of the numeric award on teaching evaluations for the question about whether overall the instructor is effective. At Queen's and McGill, students rate instructors on a 5 point scale, while at UBC students use a 7 point scale. For 2010-2013, Dalhousie did not have an "overall" question. For those years I used the question "Does the instructor show an interest in teaching".

 In this year, students were not able to differentiate the evaluations for the legal research (taught by professional librarians) and writing portions of the course.
