

HELP! I CAN'T ACCESS WHAT I WANT!

Why am I being asked to pay for articles or books?

- #1. If you use Google for research, you might come across articles in JSTOR. You may be unable to access these articles because you are not logged in through the Libraries.
- #2. If JSTOR is asking you to pay for an article, search for the article's title in quotation marks on <https://libraries.dal.ca/>
- #3. When you find the article, click the title, click "Full Text Available," and click any one of the green GO buttons
- #4. If you're off campus, be sure to log in with your NetID and password
- #5. Download, read, and enjoy

What do I do if something online is broken, lost, or just impossible to access?

- #1. It doesn't hurt to try again in a different browser, check your internet connection, and ensure that you're logged in if you're off-campus
- #2. Sometimes online material is broken or lost and we can only apologize, but please let us know so we can fix it for you
- #3. Fill out our online form before closing your window or tab and describe the issue as best as you can: <https://libraries.dal.ca/help/eresource-access-help-form.html>
- #4. Be sure to include your contact information so we can update you on what went wrong, when it will be fixed, and how you can access the material you were looking for

Tip: Common problems that you might encounter include: broken links on the library website, electronic books with broken links, eBook titles listed before they are available, empty records for books in the library, journals to which we no longer have access, or other potential errors. Please help us continue to improve the website by letting us know!
