

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS THEORY Political Science 5523 – 2014

Professor: Frank P. Harvey (frank.harvey@dal.ca)

Telephone: 494-6605

Office: 3rd Floor, Henry Hicks Building (main Political Science office)

Office Hours: Wednesdays 11:30am - 1:00pm (or by appointment)

PLEASE NOTE: The 2nd half of the course will be taught by Professor Brian Bow - separate syllabus will be distributed in January.

Course Description

This course is designed to acquaint students with the prominent theoretical frameworks, perspectives and methodologies in the subfield of international relations. It will quickly be obvious that there is no one theory or approach - the field encompasses a series of contending explanations of dominant trends and patterns in nation state behaviour. Students are expected to understand, analyze and critique these arguments by exploring their logical, theoretical and empirical strengths and weaknesses.

The reading list represents both traditional and modern writings in international relations, comparative foreign policy and US foreign policy analysis. The course approaches these subjects from different perspectives and features several seminal works and literature reviews. Students should be familiar with the most enduring literature of a discipline, and should try to answer for themselves why those works have endured. The theory of Realism, for example, has been a longstanding preoccupation of IR scholarship, and it has been said that much of IR theory has been a dialogue between proponents of Realism and their critics and supporters.

The bibliography in international relations is immense, and no attempt will be made here to list bibliographic references beyond those brief citations provided in the course outline. Students should become aware of the periodical literature in the field and should be familiar with the following journals -- World Politics, International Organization, International Studies Quarterly, Journal of Conflict Resolution, Security Studies, International Security, International Journal, Foreign Policy, Foreign Affair and Review of International Studies. Other highly subscribed general-interest journals in political science will occasionally have excellent articles on IR theory, including the American Political Science Review, Canadian Journal of Political Science and Millennium.

The course will be run as a seminar with regularly assigned readings and discussion. Students will be expected to present summaries of assigned readings (the number depends on class size), and there will be approximately four to five reports per class. Students are required to complete two papers. The final grade for the course will be compiled as follows:

Two Essays	70%
Class Participation (including oral/written reports)	30%

Class attendance and participation are COMPULSORY.

Students are expected to complete all assigned readings prior to each class. Everyone should come prepared to evaluate the central contributions of these readings through consistent and active participation in class discussions. Each student will be required to deliver at least four oral presentations of selected readings during the semester (approximately 8-10 minutes each) and co-lead discussion during these classes. Specific guidelines for these presentations will be reviewed during the first class. Students who miss more than two classes will not receive marks for class participation.

General policies concerning assignments, deadlines, and grades

The University Calendar makes plain that "[s]tudents are expected to complete class work by the prescribed deadlines. Only in special circumstances (e.g. the death of a close relative) may an instructor extend such deadlines." Late essays will be assessed a penalty at the instructor's discretion. Students who miss the deadline for a discussion paper or major paper on account of illness are expected to hand the assignment in within one week of their return to class, with a medical certificate in hand, per academic regulations in the Dalhousie Calendar.

Plagiarism (intentionally or unintentionally representing other people's ideas as your own) is a serious violation of academic ethics, and will be taken seriously in this class. For info on what plagiarism is, how to avoid it, and the penalties for not doing so, check out: http://academicintegrity.dal.ca/index.php

Course Outline and Required Readings

PLEASE NOTE -- in order to eliminate the high cost of course material, the 2014 International Relations Theory syllabus has been revised to include only material that is accessible online. All readings and journal articles can be found using the links listed in the syllabus or by accessing the relevant Journal through Dalhousie's Electronic Journals web page. If there is no direct link provided in the syllabus (or if the link leads to a subscription page or pay wall), simply track the journal title, edition/volume, author, article title and page numbers here:
