The Network for End of Life Studies (NELS) is an interdisciplinary team of researchers and clinicians from Dalhousie University, Capital Health District and IWK Health Centre in Halifax, Nova Scotia (NS). Canadian Institutes for Health Research (CIHR) funded a 5-year Interdisciplinary Capacity Enhancement (ICE) grant (2006-2011, $820,000) to build research to address the needs of vulnerable populations.

Vision

To enhance interdisciplinary research capacity through collaborations aimed to identify disparities and inequities in quality end of life care; expand end of life care vulnerabilities; and develop and test ways to overcome inadequacies in publicly funded end of life care for persons at end of life with chronic disease.

Expanding interdisciplinary team

Primary strengths were in medicine, epidemiology and ethics. Interdisciplinary links are continually expanding. See nels.dal.ca for list of trainees.

New Co-Investigators
• Gerri Frager: pediatric palliative physician whose work resulted in the book, Ed’s Story. The Dragon Chronicles
• Trevor Dummer: geographer who helped develop aggregate measures of deprivation and travel time to linked database analysis

Post Doctoral Fellows
• Victor Maddalena: African Nova Scotians and Newfoundland deaf community
• Judith Fisher: Prescription Monitoring Program, Pharmacare data and linking with College of Pharmacy

New Investigators
• Christine Beck: quality of end of life care in nursing homes
• Heather Castleden: Aboriginal communities
• Alix Carter: Emergency medicine
• and others

Other trainees
• André Maddison, Masters student: Equity
• Cathy Simpson, PhD student: Spiritual care
• Elsie Rolls, Health Administrator: Pain assessment and management
• Jennifer Williams, Masters Student: Pediatrics and nursing
• Rebecca Earle, PhD student: Pediatrics, nursing and emergency care
• and others

Collaborators
• Ann McKim (08-), Gael Page (05-08), Canadian and Nova Scotia Hospice Palliative Care Associations (CHPCA, NSHPCA)
• Julie Lachance, Health Canada
• Health Association of African Canadians

Beyond cancer database linkage

Early focus of NELS was on cancer. Collaboration has since extended to other chronic disease programs.

Moving beyond Halifax

Across Nova Scotia
• Serge Dumont led cost study and David Henderson led needs study in Colchester East Hants
• NELS ICE presentation in Antigonish
• Collaboration with a Yarmouth nephrologist, Ahmad A. Tarakji
• Sue Korol and Anne Frances D’Intino caregiver study in Cape Breton

Atlantic Canada
• Graeme Rocker and Joanne Young’s studies on chronic obstructive pulmonary disease in Saint John, New Brunswick
• Delores Mullings and Gail Widemann’s Newfoundland research into the role of social work supporting informal caregivers
• Victor Maddalena’s research with the deaf community in Newfoundland

Nationally
• Eva Grunfeld, relocated to Toronto, lead nationally on the special topic, end of life with cancer, in the Canadian Cancer Statistics 2010 by the Canadian Cancer Research Institute. NELS ICE Principal Investigators, Grace Johnston and Fred Burge contributed to the end of life feature in this report.

• 85% of National visitors have been from NS: others represented below.

Conclusion

Good interpersonal relationships, flexibility and acceptance of new researchers, disciplinary areas and methods have been critical success factors. Strategies included protecting research time for clinician researchers and faculty with teaching and administrative responsibilities. New research grant funding, peer review publishing, supporting strong trainees, financial transparency and sustaining NELS after ICE ends remain priorities.
